North American Radio-TV Station Guide

Fifteenth Edition

Vane Jones is engaged in many activities, but his first love is this book. Whenever possible, he is in his study, with a television set and two or three radios all operating at once. He can recite call letters and tell you the history of stations by the hour. Since the publication of his first station guide in 1958, his list of followers has grown with each edition, primarily because of the personal attention he gives each entry and the hairline accuracy for which he is famous.

Preface

This book has been prepared from official information, and every effort has been made to provide listings that are as complete, accurate, and easy to use as possible. Television, fm, and am stations in the United States, Canada, Cuba, Mexico and the West Indies are indexed by geographic location, frequency, and call letters. All stations currently on the air, plus those that have temporarily ceased operation and those that hold construction permits, are listed.

The frequencies of broadcast stations are assigned by individual governments in accordance with international agreements. In this book, the assigned frequencies of am stations are given in kilohertz (kHz), and the frequencies of fm stations are given in megahertz (MHz). (One kilohertz is one thousand cycles per second, and one megahertz is one million cycles per second.) In keeping with the most widely used practice, the frequencies of television stations are given in terms of channel numbers rather than actual frequencies.

The frequencies (sometimes called "channels") for am stations are classified according to the intended coverage areas of the stations assigned to each frequency. Local channels are for use by low-power stations that serve limited areas. Regional channels are for use by medium-power stations that serve somewhat larger areas. Clear channels are primarily for use by high-power stations that cover wide areas; however, other stations are often assigned to a clear channel when they do not interfere with the dominant stations on the channel. In the list of am stations arranged by frequency, the classification of each channel is included in the frequency heading. In the case of clear channels, the country or countries having priority of use of the channel are indicated.

The am listings include day and night power (in watts). Because of the action of a layer of the upper atmosphere called the ionosphere, the signals of am stations travel much greater distances at night than during the day. For this reason, interference between stations is a greater problem during nighttime hours. To minimize the possibility of interference, many stations are prohibited from operating at night; some are permitted only limited nighttime hours of operation; still others are permitted to operate unlimited hours but with reduced power at night. The schedule notes identify stations that operate with these restrictions.

As in many other areas of communication, there are several basic changes coming in television, am, and fm broadcasting. In tv—We are already experiencing the wonders of tv cable and tv satellites, neither of which adds much to the thrill of receiving distant stations via direct broadcast. A few more stations, however, are to be squeezed into the vhf band, and more stations are being added to the uhf band, plus pay-for-viewing will soon be available from several new or existing tv stations. Possibly the biggest change is the 1000 or more (some say 4000) low-power tv stations now being granted construction permits. These 5–10 watt stations will be programming and originating their own shows; unlike the nearly 5000 translator stations now on the air. It should make receiving long-distance tv during times of skip much more difficult, or interesting.

Changes in am—Just recently, the FCC has granted almost blanket authority to all daytime am stations to operate for 2 hours before sunrise and 2 hours after sunset, but at reduced power—so low that, again, there is little chance to receive the signal unless you can see the station's tower from your site. As low as 5 watts will get you nowhere these days. (Although I still treasure a 15-watt verification received from Greenville, Texas back in the '30s.) It is doubtful with such low power just before sunrise and after sunset that many stations will choose to extend their broadcast day. Also to be added are more than 100 unlimited-time am frequencies available as soon as the FCC grants the permits.

For fm—another 1000 commercial frequencies will be available in the 88–108 MHz band for use as soon as the FCC can rule on each application. In the meantime, the FCC is encouraging existing fm stations in Class A, B, and C to raise their power to the maximum for their class (most have already done this). Also, the low-power 10-watt educational stations are being urged to up their power and move to any other frequency they can fit into. This should make for some great DXing until the whole band is too crowded.

It is expected that some of these changes will be included in the next edition of the North American Radio-TV Station Guide. Be sure to complete your reminder form at the back of the book and mail it so you will be sure not to miss getting your copy. Suggestions for improving the book are invited and you may add your ideas when you send in your reminder form.

In the United States, fm stations are classified according to the areas they serve. Class A stations are intended to cover local areas and have a maximum power of 3000 watts. Class B and C stations are intended to serve larger areas. Class B stations are assigned in most of the northeastern United States, in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and in all of California except the northern part. They are permitted a maximum power of 50,000 watts. Class C stations are assigned in the remainder of the United States. They have a maximum power of 100,000 watts. Class D stations are 10-watt noncommercial educational stations. (Some fm stations, authorized before the present rules went into effect, have powers in excess of the maximums stated.)

In the United States, the frequencies from 88.1 through 91.9 MHz are reserved for the use of noncommercial educational fm stations. Class A, B, C, or D stations may be assigned to any of these frequencies. In the remainder of the fm band, certain frequencies are allocated for class A stations, and others are allocated for class B and C stations. These are identified by letters after the frequency headings in the list of fm stations arranged by frequency. The frequency headings also contain the channel numbers used by the Federal Communications Commission to identify the fm frequencies.

Affiliations with the major networks are shown for tv stations. Symbols are used to identify noncommercial educational stations, stations not currently on the air, am stations scheduled to change their facilities, and stations that share time on the same frequency. Satellite television stations are indicated, and their parent stations are identified. An explanation of the format of the listings and the symbols used can be found inside the front and back covers.

The completely integrated alphabetical call-letter list is an important feature of this book. It provides a comprehensive one-source reference to the am, fm, and tv broadcast stations of North America.

The information for each station has been checked and rechecked, and the final lists have been assembled by computer for even greater accuracy, but in a work of this magnitude some errors are inevitable. The listings in this edition include over 3500 changes based on information received up to January 1, 1984. If you are aware of any changes that occurred prior to that date but were missed in this edition, I would appreciate having the information. Comments from users of this book are always welcome.

North American Radio-TV Station Guide

Fifteenth Edition

Handy and informative, this easy to use computer generated reference lists over 13,000 authorized television, FM, and medium-wave AM broadcasting stations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and the West Indies.
Stations are listed three ways:

- Geographic location
- Frequency
- Assigned call letters

Special features include:

- Identification of noncommercial and educational stations
- Network affiliation for television stations
- Day and night power for AM broadcasts
- Stations not yet on the air or soon to resume broadcasting help to make the list as complete as possible

Whether you enjoy pulling in distant stations (DXing), or pilot your own airplane and need to check station frequencies or antenna heights, or like cross-country traveling and want to tune in regional stations, you will find this book a great help to identify stations. Whatever your interest in broadcasting stations may be, you should find this the most convenient, up to date, and accurate guide available.
